

When he was only eight years ago, Richard Lee Barclay knew he wanted to preach. At age 12, he was assistant superintendent for the Pleasant Hill Baptist Church in Woodville, Texas Sunday school, and he began preaching at the age of 16 at the church. Having completed high school, he enrolled at East Texas Baptist University in Marshall, having been awarded an academic scholarship by the Southern Baptist General Convention of Texas. His plan was to become a Baptist minister. God's plan was that at age 20 the brass young man, over confident with some new knowledge he had acquired in some of his classes at ETBU, went to Westside Church of Christ in Marshall to "straighten out" the minister, W.F. Washington on some things he heard him preach—he got straightened out and was baptized into the Lord's church! At age 21, he began as a Church of Christ preacher in Smithland, a small community near Jefferson, Texas. This marked the beginning of his illustrious career as one of the preeminent ministers in Churches of Christ.
